H. Youed, Carnegie, Pa. Time, and this has given them unusual insight into the ways, the idiosyncrasies, and even the feelings of their charges, and they say that they can clearly discern all these. In the practical work of the aquarium they have accomplished a good many things never done anywhere else. For instance, the moon fishes-that amuse visitors so much by the contrast between their wide expanse of opalescent scales on their sides and their extraordinarily narrow view of life from the front-have been made to live and thrive in their tank for four years, far longer than any of their kind were ever kept in captivity before, and in that time the larger one has grown from three | Under the foreign law the Stafford & Dennison, Mount Vernon, Lancaster and to ten inches in length.

to be found in the habits of the two kinds | mac. and the relative difficulty they have in obtaining food. Specifically, trout and their allies are thought to show most intelligence among the fresh-water species, while the gray snapper, nicknamed the "lawis held by sailors to be the craftiest of salt-water fish, though it cannot be said that in captivity he manifests any extraordinary astuteness. Catfish, and the carp which spend their days taking mouthfuls of pebbles and spitting them out again for the sake of the Indian meal that gets mixed among them, would stand near the other end of the scale. In the matter of food, fish display surprsing discrimination, as the angler knows to his cost. Mr. Spencer once sent a man away up into the Bronx to dig for heligrammites, which black bass are supposed to prize above all other morsels. These particular bass, however, looked at the grubs disdainfully, and condescended to eat them only because no other food was provided. Simlarly, trout in the aquarium have refused angleworms. No explanation has been offered, except that perhaps the fish were brought from localities where the food upply was of an unusual character. TO KEEP FISH HAPPY.

It is a common impression that a good-sized tank and plenty of fresh water and SIMPLICITY food are the only three requisites to keep any fish healthy and happy. Visitors to the aquarium frequently ask why it is that such and such species are not represented in the collection. There are really a good number of species practically impossible to keep alive in captivity; the herring and its allies, including the shad, are among these. Bluefish are sometimes kept for a few months when young, but not longer, Mackerel are great travelers by nature, and they fairly fret themselves to death in the confined space of a tank. Most varieties, after butting their noses ineffectually against the glass, succumb to the nevitable, concluding, apparently, that there is a harder kind of water in that direction, and that they are debarred forever from mingling with the crowd of big clumsy fishes with the white faces and the black hats beyond Fighting is another factor in the mortality of the aquarium. The general rule is that all the other fishes go out of their way to "pick on" the smallest one in the tank. When he is dead, they hunt the rext smallest. It is literally the survival of the fittest. Sometimes one particular fish will have a generally ugly disposition and fight everything in sight. A twelve inch rainbow trout once attacked a trout of another species, twenty-six inches long, and the two had to be parted by force Often a large fish conceives a violent an tipathy for a smaller fish, and almost nags it to death. The remedy is to remove both from the tank into one of the large concrete pools, where the little fish will have more room to elude its pursuers. The "lady fish," a marine variety, must be an Irish lady of the tenements, for it is so combative that two individuals cannot be city. ASK THEM.

UNLUCKY YOUNG BASS. An exception to the general attitude of hostility is when a parent fish is guarding sons, the owner of Dieudonne, the winner | the newly hatched fry. Mr. Spencer tells of the second event at Delmar, to-day, of an experience of his own in this concleaned up a good bit of money not only at | nection. Thereupon, the whole crowd had fallen upgraphed E. Colman, manager of the racing on the fry, and fairly gorged themselves, department of the state fair races, that the watchful parent being just as greedy the horse will go on Monday, Sept. 9, as the rest. against the world's trotting record, held Besides be Besides being interesting to look at, some of the salt-water fish would serve, at a pinch, as barometers. Fishermen know that fish are to be found in deeper water when stormy weather approaches. In captivity they cannot, of course, move away from shore, but they do the next best thing by gathering near the bottom. Some go further by burying themselves in the sand. and some, the "puffers," for instance, swallow water or gravel and thus anchor themselves effectively.

Liability to panic terror is one of the most human attributes of fishes. Some are more easily scared than others, but, once frightened, they lose all sense of direction or distance and run as readily into dange as out of it, like a theater audience when 237 North Pennsylvania Street some one cries "fire." Even the bullfrogs, the most stolid of amphibians, are some times carried away by it. Though they are used to being peered at, both from above and through the glass, a strange face sometimes drives them to frenzy and sets them to jumping regardless against the glass or the rocks. Usually a stay of a few months among people "tames" a fish con-siderably. Many will learn to eat from the fingers, and some, the "banded groupers, for instance, will follow a person as he walks along the platform behind their tanks. Toward the usual feed time in the late afternoon almost any fish will rush to the surface of the water whenever the wire screen above is raised, but it is hard to say how much this is due to a sense of time and how much to the natural increase of lunger as the day goes on. The seals, some of the attendants say, watch the clock and know fifteen minutes before the doorkeeper's whistle drives the crowd away that it is time to be fed.

Trust Company Goes Into Liquidation. DES MOINES, Ia., Aug. 24.-The Home Savings and Trust Company, with head officers in this city, has suspended. By almost unanimous vote of the shareholders it was decided to-day to go into voluntary liquidation. All obligations will be fully paid. The action is taken as a result of an act of the last Legislature, which rigidly restricts compounding of interest.

Crushed by a Brick Kiln. VASSAR, Mich., Aug. 24.-A brick kiln collapsed here to-day and five men were buried under four feet of brick. Titus Wagner and Seth Stevens may die.

No Nonsense About the Baker-Vawter Accounting Systems

is the "key-note" and they give results quickly and accurately. No proposition too large for us to handle. We are constantly handling the largest propositions in the

COMBINED EXPERIENCE.

It is not possible for the individual accountant, however proficient, to give equal results for the reason that his field of operations is neces-sarily limited, while we present the

BOILED DOWN RESULTS of the experience of 100 trained accountants, constantly in touch with Modern Business Requirements.

They include specialists in all lines. Baker-Vawter Company
